New Directions in Child and Adolescent Treatment:
A Sensorimotor Psychotherapy Approach with Younger Clients
Bonnie Goldstein, Ph.D.

Childhood trauma and disrupted attachment can severely impact a child's developing brain and body and have effects lasting through adulthood. Whether you work with children, adolescents or adults, it is essential for the therapist to understand how the early development of affect regulation, identity and sense of self, impact a person's ability to form and sustain relationships throughout the life cycle. Learn how you can use Sensorimotor Psychotherapy techniques to help you help your younger clients improve their ability to self-regulate, develop relationship skills, and create new competencies.

Bonnie Goldstein, Ph.D., a practicing psychotherapist, specializes in child, adolescent, family & group treatment. A Child & Adolescent Consultant for the Lifespan Learning Institute, & author of The Handbook of Infant, Child & Adolescent Psychotherapy; A Guide to Diagnosis and Treatment, Volumes I & II, & several other books, she is certified in Sensorimotor Psychotherapy. Her website is www.drbonniegoldstein.com.
